October 8	Dr. Stephen Nowicki, Professor of Psychology Emeritus at Emory University	Making Relationships Work at Any Age; the Importance of Nonverbal Communications - Part 2 Dr. Nowicki will join us again from his presentation last November and will provide on October 8 Part 2 of his stimulating presentation on the importance of nonverbal communications in managing inter-personal relationships as we age. Recent research has found that establishing satisfactory relationships are key at all times and with all facets of life, especially during our later years. Perhaps the most important skill needed to make relationships work, nonverbal language, is understudied and under-appreciated. The presentation will describe the way relationships work and the role nonverbal language plays in making them succeed or fail.
